In an international armed conflict, protected civilians may be interned\[1\], i.e., subjected to non-criminal detention\[2\] based on the serious threat that their activity poses to the security of the detaining authority\[3\]. Therefore, internment is a security measure, and cannot be used as a form of punishment. This means that each interned person must be released as soon as the reasons which necessitated his/her internment no longer exist. Furthermore, the decision to intern is to be made on an individual basis, and entire groups of civilians may not be collectively interned.

The Fourth 1949 Geneva Convention provides extensive protection for civilian internees during international armed conflicts.
